Where Conversations with Diverse Women Create a Better Social Experience

Four years ago, in the throes of perimenopause, Nina Collins created a community on Facebook called "What Would Virginia Woolf Do?" She was craving a space where she could talk to likeminded women about the indignities (and joys) of aging in a funny, completely candid way.

The group unexpectedly hit a chord and when membership grew to over 30,000 we made the decision to leave Facebook and move the community to our own private platform, which launched in October 2019. You can now find all of our website content (articles, podcasts, Woolfer TV, etc.) as well as our private community space at www.thewoolfer.com or by downloading The Woolfer App on your mobile device.

Who are the Woolfers? Women over the age of 40. Diverse women. Savvy women. Funny women. Women who read a lot. Women who don't shy away from the word "Feminist." Women who can (and do) talk about anything. Women who get shit done. Self-Identifying women. Women who question themselves. Women who aren't afraid to laugh and cry in front of each other.
